

What a week. We have witnessed the end of an era. Growing up with Wonder Bread, Hostess Cupcakes and the ever-beloved Twinkie, it is with shock that we learned the company is ending. Why? We have changed our habits and the Company did not stay in tune with the changing culture. We have moved away from the sweetened processed foods and towards healthy alternatives. While I love the Hostess Cupcakes, I honestly cannot remember the last time I had one. Why – because I try to limit the amount of preservatives and processed foods I eat, and the cost is just not worth the product.

Church, as practiced in the majority of our western is sadly heading the same way as Hostess. It is becoming less and less relevant to the lives of the people. It is filled more and more with artificial preservatives filling people with nothing to give out. When a church strays away from the Bible and adds more and more regulations, the cost becomes prohibitive and pushes the lost away.

There is a lost and dying world all around us, and we are the only Jesus they will ever know.
