

Oliver the cat loves to go outside. But we are such nervous owners, we fear he will hurt himself and we follow him around, not letting him climb on the railing. (Just a note, it is two stories high, and the fall would truly hurt him) Today, while I was sitting outside, he wanted to come out, but I knew that he would want to climb. So I went to find the harness and leash – this time, he kind of tolerated them. He found out that if he has harness on, I would let him climb all over the place. This he did! Oliver went up the bike (he climbed the wheels!), he was on the railing, and I still think he would have fallen if we did not have his harness on.

Sometimes we want to go places where God does not wish us to go. Not that the places are bad, but maybe at this time, they are not for us. He lets us climb where we may get in to trouble, but God places a harness on us to protect us and to keep us safe. He will never let us fall.
